Animal Law with Lesli Bisgould

Animals are implicated in a surprising number of legal disciplines. Lesli Bisgould, who has practiced animal rights law for ten years and now teaches it at the University of Toronto, will discuss the emerging field of animals and the law, including the unique role that animals play as living property in a legal system conceived by and for human beings. On the one hand, they are things that we eat and use in experiments. On the other hand, they are beloved family companions. The legal system has a hard enough time handling all the human conflicts that come to it. How does it respond when the conflict is between humans and animals?
